Are labor unions making a comeback in the 21st century workforce?

Workers at both Amazon and Starbucks have voted to unionize. Businesses of all sizes and in virtually every sector are still reeling from “The Great Resignation” and, even with the promise of higher wages, finding workers continues to be a struggle. And in California, there’s talk of a four-day work week.

Are we witnessing a resurgence of labor unions? The birth of a new 21st century workforce? And what does it mean for employers?

We’ll get into these questions and more with employment and labor law attorney Kristin L. Wedell.
