DMC Attorney Discusses Legal Innovation in Lawyers Journal

Dickie McCamey attorney George Dylan Apossos explained how nationwide reform to improve the public's access to justice may lead to the development of exciting new legal technologies in this month's edition of the Allegheny County Bar Association's Lawyers Journal.

The article explains how some states have revised their professional rules of ethics to permit non-lawyer ownership of law firms, thereby reducing constraints on how lawyers market their services and encouraging outside investments to streamline and accelerate legal innovation.

Mr. Apossos is a commercial litigator who places a particular emphasis on using innovative legal technologies in commercial legal practice to the benefit of the firm's clients. Please feel free to direct any questions you may have about the #AccessToJustice movement, the development of legal technology, or the commercial implications of the above-referenced reforms to him.
